

What You Should Know About Hiring A Videographer

Editorial by: Thomas W. Hickman

It's been said, "a picture says a 1000 words," so if that's true then VIDEO must tell the whole story.

Only video DVD will allow everyone to relive your wedding day as it actually happened to see you walk down the aisle, to hear you exchange vows and rings, to hear and see the toasts, the music, your first dance at the reception...and the chance to preserve the complete story of your wedding. This wasn't possible in the past.

When you choose to invest in a professional videographer, you're honoring the importance of your wedding day. Only a trained and experienced wedding videographer is prepared to capture the details of your special day, from the preparations of the bride and groom getting ready at the beginning of the day, through the special moments of the ceremony, and the celebration and excitement of the reception. Afterwards, creative editing will polish your video artistically and professionally to produce a video DVD that not only documents your day, but also is fun and entertaining to watch again and again.

Unlike almost everything else you pay for on your wedding day, your video is an investment not an expense; it will become more valuable as time goes on. Pricing for videography, just like photography, varies widely. Technology, talent, and time are a few factors which will effect the pricing of your video.

For example, you may find professional videographers in your area using similar cameras and editing systems.. However, it will be their skills, experience, style, and techniques in both shooting and editing that will immediately capture your attention, distinguishing their work as a step above the rest. This is why it is virtually impossible to shop by price alone when selecting your videographer. Professional wedding videography is an artistic, not a mechanical medium. Videographers shoot and edit video differently.

To make an informed decision about the distinguishing differences, and be sure that your videographer can match your preferences, you need to see actual samples of work produced by the videographer who will be recording and editing your event. You should meet with the actual person who will be shooting on the day of your wedding to make sure you are comfortable with them as well as their work.
